Death is a brilliant mirror that offers us discernment about life's priorities and a deep appreciation of the power of mind. But, we must prepare, both in ordinary ways and spiritually. Without preparation, our end-of-life transitions can be overwhelmingly confusing and painful—for the dying person, for caregivers, and for family and friends. Preparation is urgent, because the time of death remains uncertain. A discussion of end-of-life care directives is part of her teachings.

Chagdud Khadro became a student of Chagdud Tulku Rinpoche in 1978. Since Rinpoche's death in 2002, Khadro serves as the spiritual director of the Chagdud Gonpa centers in Latin America. She lives in Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, where she teaches and writes.
